2022 Summer/Fall Beginning Undergraduate Researcher Support Program – A dozen opportunities to choose from…

- May 3: Proposals posted on website; student application opens
- May 16: Student application closes @ 11:59pm

This funding will support research opportunities for undergraduates who are engaging in formal research for the first time. While open to all undergraduate students in the College of Agricultural Sciences who are engaging in research for the first time, freshmen, sophomores, and first-year transfer students are especially encouraged to apply for this support. The objective of the Beginning Researchers Support Program is to enable undergraduates to explore research experiences under the guidance of a faculty researcher.

Students apply and may select up to two project they are interested in. After the student application closes, faculty will contact applicants they are interested in considering and they will make the final selection. Students will be notified regardless of outcome. Selected students will be required to attend an orientation before Winter Break. Selected students will also be required to keep a research journal and create and present a research poster at either the annual Fall Student Showcase & Career Fair in October, or the Ag & Natural Resources Day event typically held in May. Students and faculty will also receive periodic check-ins from the College of Agricultural Sciences’ Student Engagement Coordinator.

Funds Available

Funds must be used for student wages only. Students selected for Summer/Fall are funded for $1000.00.
